The vast, multi-coloured and streaky sea was gradually spread out on the green carpet in front of us. The ropes and large wicker basket were carefully placed at the bottom. After what seemed like an age of silence, there was a sudden, deafening roar and, slowly, life was breathed into the motionless expanse. An eerie feeling crept over us as we gazed upon this magical sight; the ripples were calm at first, but the waves soon became more violent as the stripey sea rose upwards. The full wonder of this magnificent sight was soon clear for all to see, as the hot air balloon grew to its full size and lifted up to the heavens.

Lesson 45

1. The waving grasses brought tears to Adam's eyes. His hay fever was worse. The pollen was making his eyes itch and his eyes' condition got worse when he rubbed them. His handkerchief's edge was wet with tears. He decided to go and visit some friends to make himself feel better. Adam walked round to Ceris and Dave's house and rang the bell. The bell's ring was loud and it woke the dog. He could hear Brutus' howls from outside, followed quickly by Dave's voice telling Brutus to be quiet. As she opened the door, Ceris' face broke into a pitiful smile because she could see the state of Adam's eyes. "Come in away from the pollen," she said. "You look like you need some of Ceris and Dave's tea and biscuits!"

Tom was behind the palm tree. He was lying in the long grass. From there he could see the pirate's boots. They were black – and very old. He could also see his sword. The point was sharp and the blade was shiny. He hoped that the pirates had given up looking for him. Just then he heard a rustle in the grass and felt a hand on his shoulder.
